FOOTBALL SUPREME IN TRAINING CAMPS

Air Is Full of Pigskins, for Officers Consider Game Ideal Sport.

By GEORGE B. UNDERWOOD.

Just about two months later than this last fall Capt. Crawford Blagden was playing a slashing game for Camp Upton a their football battle against the eleven from Camp Devens at the Polo Grounds Now on the larger checker board of war be is doing bigger things, as can be seen from the numerous times he recently has been mentioned in the cable despatches for the part he played in the fighting along the Vesle and the Alene. "The battle of Waterloo," said Wel-lington, "was won on the football fields of England." The courage, aggressiveness, disregard of injury, ability think and act under fire schooled the Briton through his devotion to Rugby was what made the "thin red line" hold against the last desperate charge of Napoleon's veteran soldlery.

Speaking of service sports Prof. loseph E. Raycroft of the Commission for Training Camp Activities says, "In he final analysis all physical training in the army must have a practical military significance." Football possesses this significance to an unusual extent. Down at Camp Dix Sol Metzger has more than forty football elevens in the naking. Capt, Frank Glick, the former Princeton gridiron hero, has just a many more at Camp Upton. One wil find it the same whatever cantonment he visits. There is not a high officer among our forces who does not realize the value of football and the close relationship it bears to the military.

Another college coach who has hopes of arranging meetings between his charges and service elevens is Hugo Bezdek of Penn State. In his role as manager of the Pittsburg team of the National League Bezdek showed what can be expected of him in football. Bezdek practically was "green" as a pitter with the privates. Football is Hugo's own game, the sport in which best leading to the dictum of the lighter man, then the weiter title would not change hands, no matter if Leonard were to score a knockout.

This was exemplified in the bout between Terry McGovern, the feathers weight champion, and Frank Erne, the holder of the lightweight title. Erne had won the championship from Lavigne hat 135 pounds at 3 P. M., and he deal splendld success with the Pirates. Another case in point is furnished by the bout in which McGovern won the featherweight title from Dixon. The greater has been and for months previously defended his championship at 122 pounds. O'Rourke, manager of Dixon, reached the conclusion that McGovern at 122 pounds would be at his best, and therefore, acting for the champion, set the astonishment of O'Rourke McGovern was strong as a lion at 118 and knocked out Dixon in the eighth round.
